1. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

2. Claims 1-13, 16-18, 23-39, 42-45, 48-59, 65-71, 75-88, 91-93, 103-124. and 128-137 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Cheng et al (US 6,516,209).

Cheng et al shows a method and system for determining the distributions of one of more properties in an absorbing and highly scattering medium (see the abstract, lines 1-4). Optical radiation is directed into the medium and radiation exiting the medium is received and detected. The system is "self-calibrating", that is, one or more calibration factors (the baseline discussed in the abstract, lines 16-19) is derived, and, as it is not known prior to the measurement, is a variable. One or more optical properties of the medium are derived using the received and detected radiation and the calibration factors, and the distribution in the medium is determined therefrom. Obtaining a distribution from the measuring data is solving an inverse problem.

The baseline inherently will include the relevant factors including the source and detector coupling and location factors. Those in the art can, using only ordinary skill in the art, choose particular wavelengths and geometries appropriate for the measurement being performed; the reference mentions the use of near infra-red (column 9, lines 26-29). Displaying the images obtained is at least obvious.

The reference discusses calculations; writing and storing a program on a computer readable medium to have a computer perform the calculations would have been obvious.

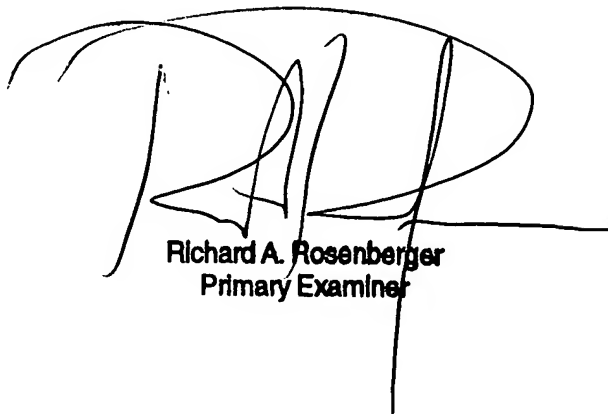

3. The reference does not appear to teach or suggest the use of obtaining both the amplitude and phase of radiation exiting the medium, nor both the intensity and temporal delay of the radiation exiting the medium; thus claims 14, 15, 40, 41, 89 and 90 appear to contain allowable subject matter. The reference does not appear to teach the minimization of the least squares difference between theory and measurements using a Rytov or born approximations; thus claims 19-22, 46, 47, 60-64, 72-74, 94-102 and 125-127 appear to contain allowable subject matter. These claims are all objected to as being dependent from unallowed parent claims, but would be allowable if rewritten in independent form including all of the limitations of their respective parent claims.

4. Any inquiry concerning this communication or earlier communications from the examiner should be directed to Richard A Rosenberger whose telephone number is (571) 272-2428. The examiner can normally be reached on Monday through Friday during the hours of 8:00-4:30.
